" Montesquieu had been a great reader, and had common-placed every thing he read ; at length he wanted to undertake some work, into which he book in a digested form. He fixed on the subject of the Spirit of Laws. He consulted his friend Helvetius about publishing it, who strongly dissuaded him, but without success .---The world did not concur with the opinion of Helvetius ; though the intelligent part of mankind, all who reflect, concur in considering the Spirit of Laws as a book of paradoxes, containing indeed much truth and sound principle, but abounding also with gross inconsistencies, apocryphal facts, and false inferences. The Commentary and Review takes it up in this light. not by criticising words or sentences. but by taking a book at a time, consiing to confirm or confute it ; and much of confutation there is, and of substitution of true for false principles. I cannot venture to say that every sentiment of the work will be generally approved, but I believe no man will read it without pleasure, and thousands may read it with advantage.

It appeared in every respect as perfect as if it had been reared by its natural mother; but its foster parent, not thinking her task finished, attended to its feeding with the utmost assiduity ; vigilantly protected it from the cold ; and, in due time, had the pleasure to find it a fine henbird, of perfect growth and beauty.

In the course of three years it has laid three hundred eggs, and brought us several broods of chickens, and one of ducks; but its singular habits are yet to be remarked, and are well deserving the notice of the curious in natural history. Its domestic qualities are numerous. It constantly prefersthe house and the company of its kind protector to that of its own species, and shews a desire to accompany her whereever she goes.

This extraordinary hen obtained the name of Fanny ; seems to understand its mistress's language, and by marks of affection shows it is not insensible to gratitude. In a word, it appears to have lost many of the natural habitudes of its kind, and to have acquired some of the best qualities of the human race law. Punctual attendance is required, -a sense of attachment, and a desire to render itself agreeable.
