Report of the Committee on Reconstruction.

Mr. Fessenden in the Senate, and Mr. Stevens in the House of Representatives, presented the report of the Committee on Reconstruction.

It commences by stating the reasons for their own action, and they came on the subject submitted to them. They speak of the Confederate States at the close of the rebellion as being in utter exhaustion.

It was now proposed to state, as briefly as possible, the general facts and principles applicable to all the States lately in rebellion.

First, the seats of Senators and Representatives for the so-called Confederate States became vacant in the year 1861, during the second session of the 36th Congress.

Second, the States thus seceded from the Union, were not only in rebellion, but they were also in insurrection.

Third, the States thus seceded from the Union, were not only in rebellion, but they were also in insurrection.

Fourth, the States thus seceded from the Union, were not only in rebellion, but they were also in insurrection.

Fifth, the States thus seceded from the Union, were not only in rebellion, but they were also in insurrection.

Sixth, the States thus seceded from the Union, were not only in rebellion, but they were also in insurrection.

Seventh, the States thus seceded from the Union, were not only in rebellion, but they were also in insurrection.

Eighth, the States thus seceded from the Union, were not only in rebellion, but they were also in insurrection.

Ninth, the States thus seceded from the Union, were not only in rebellion, but they were also in insurrection.

Tenth, the States thus seceded from the Union, were not only in rebellion, but they were also in insurrection.

Eleventh, the States thus seceded from the Union, were not only in rebellion, but they were also in insurrection.

Twelfth, the States thus seceded from the Union, were not only in rebellion, but they were also in insurrection.

Thirteenth, the States thus seceded from the Union, were not only in rebellion, but they were also in insurrection.

The Dog Goned Dog.

BY BRICK POMEROY.

Durn the dog! There goes a three by five pane of glass out of the door, and there goes the cussedest and wussdest piece of exhibit canine we ever saw! Four years ago, the day after a chap on the cars had the upper end of his snout punched for calling a nigger a dog.

Eight. It has been shown in this report, and in the evidence submitted, no proof has been afforded to Congress of a constituency in any of the so-called Confederate States, unless we except the State of Tennessee.

Ninth. The necessity of providing adequate safeguards for the future before restoring the insurrectionary States to a participation in the direction of public affairs is apparent from the bitter hostility to the Government and people of the United States yet existing throughout the conquered territory.

Tenth. The conclusion of your committee, therefore, is that the so-called Confederate States are not at present entitled to representation in the Congress of the United States; that before allowing such representation adequate security for future peace and safety should be required; that this can only be found in such changes of the organic law as shall determine the civil rights and privileges of the citizens in all parts of the Republic.

Eleventh. The States thus seceded from the Union, were not only in rebellion, but they were also in insurrection.

Twelfth. The States thus seceded from the Union, were not only in rebellion, but they were also in insurrection.

Thirteenth. The States thus seceded from the Union, were not only in rebellion, but they were also in insurrection.

Fourteenth. The States thus seceded from the Union, were not only in rebellion, but they were also in insurrection.

Fifteenth. The States thus seceded from the Union, were not only in rebellion, but they were also in insurrection.

Sixteenth. The States thus seceded from the Union, were not only in rebellion, but they were also in insurrection.

Seventeenth. The States thus seceded from the Union, were not only in rebellion, but they were also in insurrection.

Eighteenth. The States thus seceded from the Union, were not only in rebellion, but they were also in insurrection.

Nineteenth. The States thus seceded from the Union, were not only in rebellion, but they were also in insurrection.

Twentieth. The States thus seceded from the Union, were not only in rebellion, but they were also in insurrection.

Looking at the Dark Side of It.

Some people in the North appear inclined to look at the dark side of everything which occurs in the Southern States.

They are bad enough; the South has always been a frontier land, in which the laws were less respected, and violence more frequent, than in the more thickly settled and freer East.

But it is more than just, but only mischievous, to insist that the whole of that region is lawless, depraved, and irrevocably given over to violence.

Those people who see in the Memphis riot, and in every other occurrence of that kind, a proof that the Southern people ought not to be represented in Congress, and that the greater number of them ought to be disfranchised, as though that would make them contented or peaceable, remind us in their indiscriminate suspicion and dislike, of an old story of Cornwall in the last century.

He was wrecked on the Cornish coast, and it happened that only one of the crew saved alive was a monkey. Jocko was taken to a fire, dried and warmed, and thereupon strictly interrogated as to his nativity, where the ship belonged, whether she was bound, &c., &c.

He made such answers as he could, which his questioners vainly tried to understand. No one in that region had ever seen a monkey; they took his chattering and grinnings to be some foreign lingo, and finally it was determined to have him regularly examined, and his case decided on by a jury.

They were once more rigidly questioned by a magistrate in presence of the jury; he made answer, as before, in a tongue none of the natives understood. They were, therefore, that day and that night, kept in the jail, while the jury deliberated upon his case.

It did not need a long time for the twelve wise men to agree upon a verdict; they declared "He is a Frenchman and a Papist—hang him!" And accordingly Jocko was hanged.

It seems to us that here and there a Northern journal or Congressman is inclined to think of and treat the Southern people as a monkey; they are a considerable part of them—much as the Cornish jury treated poor Jocko. We do not think if the wisest method.

All things must have an end.

Wee Women!

How very interesting it is to observe the youth of the present day. There are no boys and girls left.

That department, like the commissary and whiggery, has played out; they are all miniature men and women.

Boys have run to seed, in cigar smoke, pomps and struts, and brandy slings; and girls have quite subsided behind soft simpers, paper curls and French fur-bowls and flounces.

See them enter church—young ladies from eight to twelve springs—and it's enough to make the "spirited" move a sober-eyed Quaker to smile under his broad brim. Young Miss goes up the aisle with a top and a bob; a twist and a tizz, that makes her short skirts shiver like a Fourth of July flag in a spanking breeze, and enters a pew with a graceful bow to some already arrived acquaintance.

She wears a blue and white, and spreads her ample silk skirts to their stretch; and sinks languidly down, with a cut of her eye across the way to see if some miniature man or belle or beau is bent on washing her with orbs of indignant admiration and covert enmity. Her hair, just as she expected, and her long lashes drop over her modest eyes—to see if the pink bow on her bosom is properly placed, and take a shy peep into the dainty mirror so conveniently set in her fan handle.

All just to her mind, and she sits like a Madonna, during service, with very frequent restless glances towards the miniature man, who straightens up dignifiedly and runs his manly fingers through his short, stiff hair, with sundry startling squirts towards the nearest spittoon, to find himself an object of such flattering interest to the gaily attired young lady, not yet in her teens. He only wishes he had a real Havana and a glass of champagne, that he might show to better advantage to the bewitching young creature across the way.

They squint at each other all through the long eventful sermon, of which they can't tell you a word, at its close, and go home "dreaming dreams no mortal ever dared to dream before"; the rise and progress of young America—dreams of tiny marriage rings, household furniture of the latest and approved style, and a slight sprinkling of small chips of the old block.

But the wee woman if home is not a wee lassie; she sits in the parlor with the self-conscious dignity of a queen; sets the heel of her right foot into the instep of her left, forms a semi-circle with the right, then the "left wheel" unwaveringly; tips, squats, shows her teeth, smiles and swears off to the furthest shore; her drowsy half-sense herself down, crosses her small jeweled hands systematically upon her belt buckle, and sits like a wax doll in a show window—afraid to be natural, lest she should not appear womanly. Set her down to the piano, with a pair of any-colored whiskers bending over her bare shoulders, or a miniature man, in very full rattlesome pants, high boots and Cape May diamonds, ready to snarl over the music leaves, and she'll give you every note in the gamut, with all their variations, with a good many unheard-of before, thrown in gratis; till you'd think the bottom of the cellar had dropped out and smashed everything as it went. She sings like a swan, and you'd think she was in the last agonies of a dying one, but for the evident soundness of the lungs under those catch-me-quick eyes; rolled so far towards her brain pan that nothing is visible but the whites.

Wee women sit up till eleven and twelve at night playing the amiable miniature man with large dolls and tall-tattled dolls; concerts, theaters, etc. hanging to puppy's ears, or some straggling young man, leaving his lesson for the day, to learn himself; and only go to bed at the small hours, with hair skewered up in bits of newspaper, to softly dream of beardless or bewiskered sweethearts and very speedy settlements in life.

[Field and Frasier.] TENNYSON AND GENERAL BOTLER. We infer, says an exchange, from the following stanza of his "In Memoriam" that the Laureate of England can have no great respect for the hero of Big Bethel and Fort Fisher:

I envy not his beard, who takes his lesson from the mountains, Unfettered by the smug of crime, To whom a conscience never wakes.

He grew dumber and dumber every day. He'd go to the butcher shops, rub his paws on the carcass of dead beef, and come home to make us believe that he'd been fighting. And as he growled so when he came and over had any cuts or wounds on him we thought he was getting to be
