

intimate and friendly. I had formed a favorable opinion of his disposition and general character; and, notwithstanding all that has occurred, my opinion, as to these qualities at that time, is unchanged. In the absence of motive, the absence of facts and circumstances, may, in the face of facts now tendered to you, what is there in the relation between the highest officer of the Government and the humblest citizen, which can justify, or preclude the latter from charging so injurious to him shall be either proved or refuted? It should now be understood that this charge, thus shown to be a mere phantom, is a mere phantom, and the main point upon which my reputation is assailed. You have no professional or official conduct in this particular, as bearing an implied insult to yourself; which implied insult has been fostered in your breast up to the present moment, and is now being used to give form and substance to every other shadow which jealousy or suspicion could contrive, or credulity could be prevailed upon to embrace.

What are these shadows which have thus been embodied? "At the succeeding session Mr. Calhoun's friends held meetings for the purpose of addressing you to remove Major Eaton." Three things are necessary to be proved to maintain this charge and bring it home to me. 1st. That Mr. Calhoun had a class of friends distinct from yours. 2d. That they held such meetings. 3d. That I was privy to, and gave aid and countenance to the measure. As to the first, I know of no such class. As to the second, I know of no such meeting. And thirdly, I, of course, could have given it no aid or countenance. If, however, there was such a meeting, its character and objects must be subjects for proof; and if it did address you, the names must show that it would seem only to have been a conspiracy of your own friends to persuade your head in opposition to your heart. Be this as it may, you have my denial of all knowledge of it; and my demand for proof on this point cannot be evaded.

Then "Mr. Van Buren was denounced." When? In what manner? It is true I did not enter into the views of those who were generally supposed to constitute your confidential political council, by exerting myself to promote him for the succession; nor did I follow the supposed changes in your mind, as to the propriety of using your power to promote the election of your successor; but I gave to Mr. Van Buren a fair and just support in all his official acts which were presented for my cooperation; nor have his personal friends the slightest ground to complain of my treatment to them. I cannot, however, be responsible for what others said of him; my relation to you or to him, did not require that I should bear so unreasonable a burden; nor was it your custom to hold him, or any other of your friends, accountable for the denunciations against me, which were so carefully laid on your table day after day. If such a rule had been adopted, it ought, at least, to have been made known, that each one might understand what was required, and have the opportunity of sharing its benefits.

The next charge in order is thus announced: "Arrangements were made in Congress to embarrass the measures of the administration in that body." I beg leave to require, as a matter of obvious justice, that the particular object of these imputed arrangements be specified; by whom they were made; and what motive had the alleged actors to embarrass the administration? And, lastly, at what point was I connected with them, what act of this nature was done, or advice given by me, and what motive could I have had for embarrassing the measures of the administration with which I was connected? It does not belong to the human mind to act without motive, even jealousy itself will not believe all the evil it hears of the objects of its suspicions, unless the evidence be corroborated by the appearance of some rational motive to control their actions. In this case I can imagine none. It remains, therefore, for you to show how this charge can be made to reach me. Here I leave it with my unqualified denial, whatever form or shape it may assume.

"The Calhoun Telegraph and Ingham Sentinal evince their disaffection." Again I demand the evidence. Let the columns of these papers be examined for the fact of their disaffection. The former was deemed the paper of the Administration, and the only article which, up to that period, I have heard of having been ascribed to such a feeling, the editor says was dictated, in substance, from your own lips, and approved in form by you before publication. As to the latter, I have had no political correspondence with its editors from the time of my appointment to that of my removal. Those gentlemen (and none who know them will doubt their word) will bear me out in this declaration. I admit that I regard them as my personal friends. They have long conducted, in the capital of Pennsylvania, the leading paper of the political party with which I have always been connected. They are men of tried moral and political integrity. Had I been engaged in any of the purposes thus attributed to me, it is scarcely possible that I should not have corresponded with them, and some others of their editorial brethren in Pennsylvania, or elsewhere, on these subjects. All are now at liberty to publish whatever I have written in respect to this or any other matter contained in your charges.

I will not require of you to prove that I was present, or in the company of the conspirators.

Next: "The appointment of Mr. Baldwin was denounced." This from your charge, is a charge of a very serious nature, and must be well known that, in all your conversations on that subject, whatever my preference might have been, I refused to say any thing to depress or to exalt any man, and I was very surprised, notwithstanding all I have before seen, that I am made responsible for the appointment of Mr. Baldwin, not being proved when such evidence is relied on.

The expose proceeds: "Remote editorial charges, and other matters, which are the subject of the correspondence, and which I have seen or heard of in support of this charge, is in a statement of Gideon Welles, of Hartford, Ct., who, though he was 'shocked and astounded' at the alleged suggestion, it since appears, had, some time after, written a letter to the same gentleman whom he had charged with making it, sending his best respects to Mr. Calhoun, and expressing his own private opinion that you ought not to stand another poll. It is a remarkable fact, that this same witness, now so much relied upon to sustain a far fetched assault upon me, had written another letter to the same person, soon after this shocking overture was said to have been made, in which he said, among other things of the same kind, that Major Eaton was a disgrace to your Administration. So much for this charge, and the witness: but if all he says, in the face of his letters to the contrary, be true, he only testifies to a conversation with another person, of which none pretends that I had any knowledge. Of its supposed object I never heard till it was brought out by Mr. Welles' perilous statement. But if there be ground for offence to you in such an act, it must be found in the supposition that, contrary to the general expectation, you were then anxious for a re-election, and had seized upon and laid up the mere expression of a doubt of its expediency as evidence of base designs against yourself and Administration. It is surely an act of supererogation further to deny and ask for proofs of such a matter.

The last and most prominent allegation at this period, is, that Mr. Calhoun came out with a "horrible plot," and "when this issue was made with the President, he found his Cabinet members and an entire reorganization was determined on." I shall not inquire by whom, or for what purposes, this plot was begun, but I may emphatically demand in what point it can, by the remotest possibility, be brought in contact with any act of mine, official or otherwise. I have reason to know that it was not the subject of the correspondence, nor the letters in it, which made the issue so personally offensive to you. The first was revised by your particular friend, and every expression which he thought liable to such interpretation was erased at his suggestion; and long after the letters were written, you had intimated your willingness to receive Mr. Calhoun as usual, and invite him to your table, if he would leave a card for you. I know through the same channel of an attempt at reconciliation without an explanation, which should remove the cause of difference; adding, that his honor and integrity had been impugned, and until this matter was explained, there could be no cordiality in your intercourse, and that he would not submit to an ostensible reconciliation with one who persevered in maintaining such unfounded aspersions against his character.

After all the offence contained in the correspondence was fully before you; consequently, the issue spoken of as "made with (yourself) personally," must have been made by the publication, not by the matter of the correspondence. This could not be changed by its transfer to the printer's ink. The whole iniquity of this "horrible plot," is therefore displayed in the act of publishing the correspondence. From this cause alone, it would seem, that you found (your) cabinet divided, and determined on its re-organization. All this is now placed at my door, as the consummation of an accumulating series of plots and conspiracies, of which my letter of the 21st ult. is considered an act. I cannot content myself with merely requesting the proofs of my connexion with this affair, but must be permitted to demand how, when, and on what points, were the cabinet divided, either by the matter of the correspondence, or the publication of it? Was it, or any measure connected therewith, ever brought before the cabinet, or introduced into their deliberations? Was any act of the Government influenced by it, or could any one be made to depend on the speculative opinions of the cabinet members, as to the propriety of having that document in possession of the public, rather than confined to the desks of Mr. Calhoun and yourself? Yet such is the alleged foundation of the horrible plot which compelled you to "determine on an entire re-organization of (your) cabinet." The responsibility of which, it now seems, is to be thrown on me. I have already proved that the origin of this drama was but a phantom, and it is demonstrated, that the immediate cause of its catastrophe is something, if possible, less substantial. The history of the world, I am sure, cannot furnish such another exhibition of preposterous suspicions and imaginary conspiracies, as are here advanced, and information, to collect and report materials of such lamentable credulity for their reception, and reckless temerity in determining matters of high consequence, on such a basis, has never been shown to have pervaded your council chamber, almost from the first moment you entered it, until your re-organization was carried into effect. I beg leave to pause here, and inquire, if these alleged causes for the re-organization of your cabinet be the true causes, what are the reasons for the same, from the letters of the Secretary of State and Secretary of War, in which are given their reasons for their voluntary resignation?

If the re-organization was a primary determination of your own, grounded upon the series of events indicated in your manifesto, and ripened into maturity by the publication of the correspondence with Mr. Calhoun, wherefore is it that the Secretary of State gave one reason, and the Secretary of War another, for their retirement, neither having the slightest reference to any of the causes assigned? I will not pursue the pregnant topic further than to remark, that, as there is an obvious error in the reasons given for the re-organization of a part of the cabinet, there may also be one in those given as to the remainder. Amid so many embarrassing and irreconcilable inconsistencies, I apprehend the public will be ready to conclude that the true reason has within it something so revolting to the moral sense of the American people, that it cannot be approached, neither by the slightest reference to any of the causes assigned. I will not pursue the pregnant topic further than to remark, that, as there is an obvious error in the reasons given for the re-organization of a part of the cabinet, there may also be one in those given as to the remainder. Amid so many embarrassing and irreconcilable inconsistencies, I apprehend the public will be ready to conclude that the true reason has within it something so revolting to the moral sense of the American people, that it cannot be approached, neither by the slightest reference to any of the causes assigned.

My great offence, as alleged at this crisis, it seems, was in having "taken sides with your adversaries," which, I suppose, also embraces my associates who were invited to resign; but it is added, that being a representative of Pennsylvania, I was "entitled to respect," and was therefore "treated with kindness to the last," and, in the next line, the public are told that you gave me credit for my capacity and fidelity. The kind treatment and respect were not, however, for these qualities, but because you were unwilling that Pennsylvania should suppose you wished to put "a mark of disgrace upon me." I am, indeed, gratified at finding that I owe to my native state, rather than to your sincerity, the "kindness and respect" with which I was said to be treated. But to what feeling am I to attribute your testimony to my "capacity and fidelity?" If that testimony was sincere, what becomes of the black catalogue of previous plots and base designs, prostrated in your exposure? If it be not done, the result is, that the American people, whose Chief Magistrate you are, under your own hand, that which you did not believe? Which alternative shall I choose in pursuing this discussion? I cannot make choice, and will drop the curtain, leaving to the historian of this part of your life to seek for other lights to solve this paradox, or invoke a patriotic tear to blot out the record of it. It now appears certain, however, that I was standing in office most reluctantly, notwithstanding my "capacity and fidelity," merely because you were unwilling that Pennsylvania by letting her suppose that you wished to put "a mark of disgrace" upon me. I now perfectly comprehend this announcement in another point of view. It identifies the declarations which, from time to time, emanated from those who were alleged to be in your special confidence, and to have constituted your most influential council. It was declared by those persons that I had no share in your confidence, that you would be glad of a pretext to remove me, and that you had endeavored in vain, by "securely hints," to let me know that you wished me to resign, and relieve you from the responsibility of the act; to all of which, it is added, I was utterly inensible. It is also evident from this admission, that, although I was, during this period, laboring with the most intense assiduity for the country, and to the benefit of your name, that you were seeking, with scarcely less diligence, for some pretext which would enable you to encounter with safety, the political hazard of notifying Pennsylvania by putting "a mark of disgrace" upon me. It further appears that, while these things were doing, the persons above referred to, were carrying their warfare against me into the papers of Pennsylvania. One of them, at least, was conducting the influence of your name into the elections of that State, to the disadvantage and injury of one of your own political friends, and for no other reason than because he was my personal as well as political friend; and to be an enemy of mine, and of the administration of my native State, was known to be the direct passport to the favor of your Council. I say, while these and many other such things, which I might disclose without violating the rule I have prescribed, were daily at work, you "treated me with kindness to the last!" I repose on your imputed frankness and sincerity, treating the "malign influence" which surrounded you with silent indifference, determining that it was not less due to your character than to mine that I should not seem to give credit to the assumed authenticity of acts so discredited to your fame, and that I should expect from your frankness, the only information upon which I could act in such a case, not indeed in "courtly hints" but in the honorable ingenuosities of republican frankness and simplicity. It is now proved by the documents so often referred to, that the character which I had thus formed, and thus relied upon, was but an object of my imagination, and that, instead of the "respect" with which I was "treated to the last" coming from the heart, it was but a covering for deep rooted hostility, which was only suppressed through fear of "mortifying Pennsylvania," and that I have been, during the whole period of my political connexion with you, an object of your unqualified, and now unqualified, as well as a subject for the suspicious and scrutinizing espionage of those who, it now appears, by the recognition of their sayings, acted under your special authority. I cannot but deplore that you have made it necessary for me, in my own defence, thus to speak of these things; but since it is so, I rejoice to find, in the labored and unimpaired clearness of evidence, which you have afforded me, that you have offered (me) a position of dignity and trust, quite equal to (my) deserts. It is true, you offered me the mission to Russia; but after what has been now seen, can any doubt in what light I must have understood that offer, and how limited was the scope of my refusal, but "ambition and interest," there are not a few I trust, who looking into their own hearts, will be ready to admit, that, if I had accepted of it, it could not be honorably accepted; still less could I have accepted it as a sop to reconcile Pennsylvania to the course of your administration, the course of your designs, and the course of your interests. The former seeks high station, and the latter elements: both were offered, but the "circumstances" in which I found myself placed, forbade the acceptance, and I sought only to retire to my domestic life, not meaning that this was to be further disturbed.

I now pass to the sequel of this extraordinary document, in which I find a labored attempt to adduce facts in support of an idea previously indicated, viz: that I was the aggressor in all the differences which existed between me and the Government, and that I had been "pretext for a quarrel" to carry home to Pennsylvania. What are the facts? Soon after I had appointed certain officers in the custom house of Philadelphia, disregarding the officious and improper interference of the Second Auditor of the Treasury, who, as I was informed, had been on that occasion a political visit to that city; and after I had heard that the persons who formed his circle there, spoke of my appointments as unwarranted in my then situation, I received a note from you, in which you designated me as Acting Secretary of the Treasury, not only on the outside, but in the body of the note, not supposing it to be an intimation, but recurring to a familiar address from an unusual one, but the reverse, and being the first time you had ever addressed me in that manner, carried, as I thought, on its face, the appearance of deliberate intention. The notes which I received, and which I have since published, and of which content that an impartial public should decide, from the face of our two first notes, even unconnected with the visit of Major Lewis to Philadelphia, which of us has the appearance of "seeking cause of offence" in this transaction. I have, however, been informed, that you had written to Mr. Barry, informing him that I heard that one of his Assistants had said the Department held a certain bond in terrorism over me. I will publish this correspondence also, though an inconsiderable item in this quarrel's history, from which will be readily determined, that it was not I who began the quarrel with me, or those who had undertaken a purpose so injurious to my character, as to have it believed that the silent repose which I was looking to, must be attributed to the base motive of avoiding the payment of a debt to the Government. I could not do better than to refer to the letter, not "an angry," but a respectful note to Mr. Barry, stating what I had heard, and requesting him, if he supposed I was indebted to the Department, to bring suit, as I could not believe that he would make the collection of a debt depend on such considerations. His reply was made in the same temper, although I thought he unnecessarily introduced some political matter into his letter, but it was not offensive, nor, though I declined the discussion, did I reply to him in that feeling. I supposed he had misapprehended a single point in the case, and explained it for his information, but his letter convinced me of the truth, not only of the fact, but of the threat; but that it had been written to give all the effect he could to the object of the original declaration of his subordinate. I saw too, in that letter, a germ of the feeling since so fully disclosed, and disposed of in your notice. It could have been intended for no other purpose than to give notice, but for that which you have given them. They certainly constitute no proof of a disposition in me to "seek cause for a quarrel." They are of the same character with the absurd imputations in the publication in the Telegraph, with which I had more to do than Major Eaton had; and because I would not draw, under a menace, I am represented by you as the aggressor; and because I would not present myself without defence to his pistols and stiletto, or neglect my duties to aid the civil authorities, I have been called in question for "violating the peace." To the mind which has been perverted by the workings of suspicion and passion, it is difficult to present the most clear and sober truths with effect; and I may not have satisfied you of the injustice of any of your suspicions. I can therefore only add, that nothing was ever intended by me, or that I had any difference with you, or any member of the Administration, or any retirement from the government. I am not to expect, however, that either arguments or evidence will produce a change in your opinions; or dispel the error which has so unhappily developed your short career in civil station, and so disastrously lighted the fair prospects which attended your induction into office.

You will observe that I have confined my remarks almost exclusively to the effects; I have but touched the corrupting cause of all the diseases of your administration. Nourish have been most extensive and injurious. I consented to bring my family within the sphere of its influence. I should have been among the chiefest of your favorites; but I would not thus consent to expose them, and therefore have, as it appears, experienced the effects of your secret and abiding hostility. [CONCLUSION XXX WAX]

From the Washington Telegraph of Aug. 3. Gov. BRANCH.—The following letter from Gov. Branch to the editor, confirms what has before been said by Mr. Berrien and Mr. Ingham.

ANFIELD, AUGUST 1st, 1853. Sir: I have observed in the Globe, which came to hand by the last mail, the following paragraph in Mr. Blair's letter of the 21st of July to Judge Berrien: "When the statement which I made, predicated upon Col. Johnson's letter, was impeached in your second note, I made the application to the President which you seem to think I ought now to make. He immediately put into my hands the original memorandum which he wrote, and which he read to Messrs. Branch, Ingham, and yourself, &c."

"I cannot believe that Gen. Jackson has authorized any person to say that he ever read, or made known to me, the paper or memorandum mentioned. If he has, then, as the Globe says, 'the paper of the kind was ever read or made known to me, by Gen. Jackson, to the best of my knowledge and belief.' It is a very singular circumstance, connected with the dismissal of Mr. Ingham, Judge Berrien, and myself; and, in truth, where

The President in his letter to Mr. Ingham, Judge Berrien and myself, says that 'the want of harmony in our administration, or in other words for his re-organization; and Judge Berrien and Mr. Ingham, I know, have truly interpreted the meaning of this mystical expression—want of harmony.'

I have too much respect for the intelligence of the American people to believe that they will be at any loss to arrive at an accurate conclusion from the facts already placed in their possession. If, however, it becomes necessary hereafter for me to appear before the public, I trust that I shall unhesitatingly do so. Respectfully yours, &c. JNO. BRANCH.

FOREIGN.

POLAND.—The Warsaw Courier of the 6th June says:—"The army of Field Marshal Diebitsch which was at Ostrolenka seems to have divided into three columns. One division is advancing towards the west, in the province of Ploisk. The Cossacks are at Szydlow, Suchocin, and other places. The Russian head quarters are at Zambrow. On the evening before last intelligence was received at Warsaw that an insurrection had broken out in the districts of the government of Grodno, bordering on Volhynia."

The Journal du Havre of the 21st of June, says:—"We learn by the way of Berlin, that Diebitsch is no longer Commander-in-Chief; Paskewitch having taken his place. And we are also informed, via Berlin, that the corps of Sacken and Kreutz has received a complete check in the Palatine of Augustowa. The appointment of Paskewitch to the command of the Russian army is confirmed by a communication from our Consul at Warsaw to M. Sebastiani. Our opinion is every day confirmed, that government has finally decided upon acting for Poland, in concert with Great Britain. But we cannot conceal the difficulties an undertaking of this nature must encounter—for at present, this can be a question of nothing less than erecting all Russian Poland, together with the grand duchy of Warsaw, into an independent government. We cannot expect that the Poles will ever desert the people who have risen and bled in their cause."

Eight Days Later from England. The ship York, Capt. Bursley, has arrived at New York from Liverpool, bringing dates to the 26th from London and to the 27th from Liverpool, both inclusive. The most important news which they contain, is the Death of Marshal Diebitsch, Commander-in-Chief of the Russian Army, operating against the Poles. The cause of his demise is variously accounted for. William the 19th opened the British Parliament, in person, on the 24th of June, and ordered for a second reading on the 4th of July.

France was tranquil at the latest advices. POLAND. BERLIN, JUNE 16. A report from the Russian head quarters at Kleezewo, near Pultusk, dated the 10th of June, attributes the death of General Diebitsch to a sudden attack of the cholera morbus. It is stated that previously to his malady he had enjoyed perfect health, and on the day before, was exceedingly cheerful; but at about 12 o'clock in the morning of the 9th of June he was suddenly taken ill, and his malady was immediately pronounced to be the cholera. All medical assistance proved ineffectual, and after a very painful struggle, he departed this life on Friday the 10th of June, at 1 o'clock in the morning. This melancholy event (says the above-mentioned report) seems to prove that the progress of the cholera must be attributed much less to contagion than to the weather; and to the precipitation of the persons affected, but at the time of the General's death there was not at the head quarters of the Russians one single person attacked with malady.

General Foll has accepted, par. 12, the command of the army. On the 12th inst. Gen. Diebitsch's death was not known at Warsaw, where it was, however, produced a great sensation. The Russian forces are at this moment much divided; the army before the Narew consists of 50,000 men; a corps of 20,000 men, with 40 cannons, has marched in pursuit of General Gielgud. The Guards, now formed two divisions; one remains at the head quarters; the other is opposite Gielgud. General Kreutz has abandoned the Palatine of Lublin, and has marched into Pultusk, and a corps commanded by General Rudiger and Davidoff have accepted the position of General Kreutz, and it is asserted that General Kreutz has received orders to march against the mandated the Russians at Wawer, is shortly to be tried by a court-martial. No official account has appeared respecting the movements of Gen. Gielgud; but all accounts agree as to the fact of his having completely defeated the corps under General Sacken; 2,000 fallen into the hands of the Poles; and it is even asserted that the Grand Duke Michael, with a detachment of

The news from Podolia is every day of a more cheering nature. The insurgents have taken possession of Sadowa, and made the whole garrison prisoners, with the exception of one officer, who escaped to Husiatyn. The Russian authorities were compelled to retire into Gallicia. The insurgents took a great many arms, which had been hid in the ground, as well as all the cannon of General Wirgenstein; and their numbers at this moment amount at least to 30,000 men. It is stated, however, that a detachment of the insurgents, under General Kolyako, in their ardour to pursue the Russians, had passed the frontier of Gallicia, and having been there immediately attacked by the Austrian troops, suffered a very considerable loss. The Polish papers continued to complain of the partiality of the Prussian Government, who, it is said, while it offers every possible difficulty to the passage of all those whose object is to carry assistance to the Poles, sends, not only provisions, but even engineers, to the Russians. The National Government has appointed Gen. Ratic Governor of Warsaw. Dr. Antomarchi, who has minutely inspected all the hospitals of Warsaw, has lately expressed his approbation of the satisfactory state in which he found them, and of the great care which is taken of the sick. He expresses his particular admiration of the assiduity of the ladies in attending the sick, many of whom, although of the highest rank, devote themselves entirely to this charitable occupation. The last papers from Warsaw contain an account of the grand entertainment given by the National Guard of Warsaw to the different regiments encamped in the environs of the capital, each of which was represented on this occasion by 20 deputies. Nothing, it is said, can give an idea of the interesting scene which this assembly presented to the capital, and which must contribute always to exist between the army and the citizens of Warsaw. You will perceive by my silence respecting the Polish army that there has been no fighting since my last; but people never consider the death of General Diebitsch as the signal for a general battle.

WARSAW, JUNE 15. Accounts from Guieworow, on the Vistula, report that news had been received there that Gen. Chrzanowski had gained, on the 1st, considerable advantages over Gen. Rudiger. No direct news from Gen. Chrzanowski has reached Warsaw.

Letters from Lithuania say that the insurgents, together with Gen. Chlapowski, had taken the town of Stonim, and that the Grand Duke Constantine was gone to Minsk.

The Warsaw Gazette says:—"It is affirmed that Gen. Rudiger has entered the city of Lublin, and that Gen. Kreutz has occupied Siedlec. Gen. Skrzynecki was in Warsaw yesterday, at a grand entertainment given by the National Guard to the army, at which the Members of the Government were also present. It is said that the Grand Duke Michael was present at an engagement between a detachment of the Guards and Gen. Gielgud, in the Government of Augustowa."

Wholesale Murder.—A horrible massacre, even more horrible than that of Castlepollard, has just been committed in Ireland, at a place called Newtownham, arising out of a seizure last night, at the instance of a Rev. dignitary of the church, by law established, in that unhappy country. This minister of a religion that inculcates compassion for suffering, and all the concurrent virtues of charity, mercy, and peace, had seized and brought to sale two helpless, belonging to some of his poor parishioners; and when instead of purchasing, the compassionate bystanders evinced a disposition to rescue these, the police and zealous present were ordered to fire indiscriminately on the crowd. "This, for a wonder, the police refused; but the zealous, who in Ireland are all O'Connellites, refused such reluctance, and instantly obeying the order, killed nineteen people and wounded forty, some of them women and children. How long will such atrocities be tolerated in a country calling itself intelligent and civilized?"

The crops in England are represented as looking remarkably well.

It is said that the Grand Duke Michael was present at an engagement between a detachment of the Guards and Gen. Gielgud, in the Government of Augustowa."

Wholesale Murder.—A horrible massacre, even more horrible than that of Castlepollard, has just been committed in Ireland, at a place called Newtownham, arising out of a seizure last night, at the instance of a Rev. dignitary of the church, by law established, in that unhappy country. This minister of a religion that inculcates compassion for suffering, and all the concurrent virtues of charity, mercy, and peace, had seized and brought to sale two helpless, belonging to some of his poor parishioners; and when instead of purchasing, the compassionate bystanders evinced a disposition to rescue these, the police and zealous present were ordered to fire indiscriminately on the crowd. "This, for a wonder, the police refused; but the zealous, who in Ireland are all O'Connellites, refused such reluctance, and instantly obeying the order, killed nineteen people and wounded forty, some of them women and children. How long will such atrocities be tolerated in a country calling itself intelligent and civilized?"

The crops in England are represented as looking remarkably well.

A Tribute to the Hero.—A pound of saltpetre, half a pound of alum, and half a pound of pulverized nitre, and every eighth day, a spoonful in his food, and spirits, will soon restore him to his care.—John

A Clergyman convicted.—At the High Court of Justice at Edinburgh in June, McCaig, a Minister of the Gospel, in that city, of twenty-one different committed within a fortnight, and wholly of reverend convict was transported for fourteen

DR. W. JUDKINS' Patent Specific Ointment.

PAINS have been taken to make this supply very good. It may be had at the following places: Humphrey Keyes' Charlestown, Adam Young's, Martinsburg, John Young & Co., Harpers-Ferry, Tolner & Harris, Shepherdstown.

The above Ointment is offered to the public as a safe and certain remedy for those obstinate diseases, some of which have long baffled the skill of medical science. It is particularly adapted to the following cases: 1st. White Swellings of every description. 2d. Sore legs and ulcers of long standing. 3d. Scirrhus or Glandular tumors, particularly those which attend the female breasts. 4th. Felons, or what some people know by the name of Catarrhs, of every description. 5th. Sprains and bruises of every description, or in whatever part situated. In this complaint the patient in applying the Ointment, must keep the part out of water.

POETICAL.

Let the world despise and leave me, They have left my Saviour torn, Human hopes and looks deceive, 'Tis not like them, unless, unless, And whilst thou shalt smile upon me, God of yesternight, love, and in Friends may hate, and foes may show thy face and all is right.

Go, then, earthy fame and truce, Come disaster, scorn, and pain, In thy service, pain is pleasure, With thy favor, loss is gain, I have called thee, Alas Father, I have set my heart on thee, Storms may howl, and clouds may roll, All must work for good to me, So! then know thy full salvation, Rise o'er sin, and fear, and cast Joy to find in every station, Scorching still to do or bear, Think what spirit dwells within, Think what heavenly bliss is thine, Think that Jesus died to save the Child of Heaven - canst thou not have thee on, from grace to glory, Armed by faith, and wing'd by Heaven's cherubim, before the God's own hand shall guide thee, Soon shall close thy earthly mission, Soon shall pass thy pilgrim-day, Hope all change to glad fruition, Faith to sight, and joy to power to thee.

Armed by faith, and wing'd by Heaven's cherubim, before the God's own hand shall guide thee, Soon shall close thy earthly mission, Soon shall pass thy pilgrim-day, Hope all change to glad fruition, Faith to sight, and joy to power to thee.

Armed by faith, and wing'd by Heaven's cherubim, before the God's own hand shall guide thee, Soon shall close thy earthly mission, Soon shall pass thy pilgrim-day, Hope all change to glad fruition, Faith to sight, and joy to power to thee.

Armed by faith, and wing'd by Heaven's cherubim, before the God's own hand shall guide thee, Soon shall close thy earthly mission, Soon shall pass thy pilgrim-day, Hope all change to glad fruition, Faith to sight, and joy to power to thee.
