"My child!" would Ludovic say, interrupting a passionate burst of grief, "by what magic has Arnhold gained possession of your heart?"

"He is an hussar," replied Theresa. There was something in this reply which moved Ludovic, he recollected narrate the circumstances of her illness that he himself had imbued the mind of the daughter with the sentiments of respect and esteem for the character of a good soldier, and conscience reminded him that he had too often exalted the profession of arms above the peaceful and unobtrusive occupation of the husbandman. Was it wonderful then, that Theresa should have imbibed any of this spirit; or that she should have yielded her heart to one who possessed courage to defend her, and tenderness to soothe her, under the afflictions of life? consequently, the waste lands were claimred by thut worth.

"By the treaty of 1763, between England and France, the Mississippi was established as the boundary between Butish America and Louisiana. This brought the line of Virginia very much short of the Pacific ocean.

The Western lands were claimed by the British Crown, and ceded to it by the treaty of Paris. Virginia now ceased to claim the territory "north of the lakes."

In fire, thirteen color ies had been cary ed out of Virginia at the period of the Revolution, and England had relinquished to France all her claims to the lands west of waste and unappropriated lands were rewar, the large States, and especially New York and Virginia, claimed nearly all of the Western and unappropriated lands, because they were alleged to be comprised within their original charter limits.

The colonies made common cause it the war of independence, and, from the very commencement of the Revolutionary struggle, seeing its necessity as well as policy, were desirous of making a Confederated Government. The anxiety of the large States to have their claims recognized to all of the Western domain, at once awakened the small States to the true state of the question of right and justhe public money from the Treasury as common cause agains, the common enesoon as it is collected, and convert it to | my, and regarded it but reasonable and just, and as politic as just, that what was rescued from the common enemy should be the common property of all.

the United, States agreed to pay that naviewing the public lands as having been acquired by conquest, by purchase, or by cession, there is no avoiding the conclusion that they are the common property of the United States, in which each State has an interest in proportion to its significance in the Union.

The clear and specific language of the acts of cession dissipates every vapor and shadow of doubt on the subject, could any have existed, and clearly shows that Congress has no other power, if it is true to its trust as an agent created by the States, with a specified and restricted power, than the Mississippi river. At that period, the mon fund, for the benefit of each of the garded as Crown lands; and, during the States of the Union, "according to their usual respective proportions in the general charge and expenditure;" and that the pubhe lands can only "be fuithfully and bona fide disposed of for that purpose, and for no other use or purpose whatsoever."

It must be apparent to all, that as a ommon property, designed in the artifit of all of the States, and not for the partial benefit of a part of the States, any mode of distribution or appropriation which is partial in its tendency operates an injustice to the rest, in direct violation both of the language and intention of the acts of cession. So far as they have been or may be appropriated for objects of national detence to far as they have been sold, and the proceeds paid into the Treasury, the Covernment has acted faithfully; but so lar as they have been applied to Blate andnot national purposes, so far as they have been granted to particular States for specific purposes, when they might have been granted for the like purposes to all the States, the Covernment has acted in diect violation of the very language and

The Machine and Horse Power are portable, weighing about 1600 lbs., and can easily be conin open field or at any barn in the country. The Power has a master, a second, and a band wheet, in open field or at any barn in the country. The Power has a master, a second, and a band wheet, Sotomon King. Wheeling and is connected with the Machine by a strap the second s consider shaft. Three or four good hands will set up the machinery in one hour ready for threshing; and four good horses, with seven or eight hands, will, without over working, thresh from two to three hundred bushels of wheat in a day, secording to the quality of the gram; of rye; about the same quantity; and of case, accesses and half more. From ten to fifteen bushels of clover seed can be shelled in a day, after it is prepared in the sunie manner that it would be for a mill The Machine does not occupy more room than an ordinary wind-mill and is not more than two. thirds as high.

When the farmer has threshed a quantity of grain, two or three men can set the machine to one side until he has cleaned up, and replace it again in five minutes, ready for threshing. A further description is decompd unnecessary:
