COMMUNICATIONS.

Messrs. Editors-I acknowledge that I, as the author of a late article in your paper, over the signature of Civis, will subject myself to the signature of Civis, will supply condescending to censure of some persons, by condescending to censure of some persons, by condescending to paper, in which I am charged with fal But, such is my sensitiveness under such a charge, that I am tempted, for the last time, to give 'A Mechanio" an overhauling.

I cannot, however, promise him so much bardhood he to charge him with mindacity, as thy principles teach me, were I to follow his example in bringing so serious a charge against an individual who stands entirely incog. to me, I might then with some though an individual who stands entirely incog. to me, I might then with some show of fustice, render myself ob-noxious to the suspicion that the charge was not altogether groundless. I will therefore dismiss that part of "A Mechanic's" communication which part of "A Mechanic's" communication which reads thus: "Civis appears to be fonder of poetry than of truth," and leave it, together with the weight of evidence which is adduced in its support, entirely to the intelligent reader, who may judge for himself whether the charge is sustained. I might here again resort to a quo'ation from that King of Poets, and say, "He who steals my purse," &c., did I feel that the occasion required it; but, I am afraid that it may prove offensive to "A Mechanic," and for his sake I refrain.

ake I sefrain. I forbear to make any farther comments upon is portion of his communication, and I will proceed to see if he has said any thing— which needs refutation in regard to a particular candidate to whom he has taken under his special keeping.

In perusing the long winded article of "A Mechanic," I am lead to the irresistible conclusion that he is a gentleman of high blood and bottom (it matters not how much he objects to such qualities in others) since it requires a good stretch of patience merely to survey the ground which he has gone over. I will endeavor to embrace, in a few words, the burden of his whole song, and then indulge my own reflections thereon.

In the first place, be denies that he and his party desire to make "a cat's paw" of Mr. Singler, and belathers him with the most musually der, and belathers him with the most musually futation; indeed they are such as would never have been heard of, had they not been necessary have been heard of had they not been necessary to strike har passesses in all that he has a life to the public. The black catalogue of crimes which he has arrayed to prostrate Mr. K. in his political career, will read thus: First, Mr. E. is a man of high birth. Secundly, he is an aspirant for public favor. Thirdly, he is not in the habil of shaking hands with every body (we presume whether acquainted with them or not.) And fourthly, that the Opequen, in his person, desires to triumph over the held and surplus Shramboh. [7]

But we might exhaust a schole book in giving instances to correspond to the color, that which is or six of the scale of being, it is a positive virged against Mr. K. are so purile and insignificant for the control of t lestimony to his many virtues; and "A Me-chanic" may rail at him to promote his own sel-tish refremes, but he will find that every stroke of his "nigger swell" will but mage him more, firmly in the confidence of the party whose inte-rests in part have been confided to him. Like Casar's bridge, the greater tansent of obloquy and vitoperation is heaped upon him, the more firmly will be be sustained by those at whom the

I may now say, without arrogating too much o myself, that I have vindicated Mr. K. from analysis, to be of so exceedingly a frivolous naturi, and that the object of "A Mechanic" was to excite a prejudice against Mr. K., with a view to defeat his election, under the belief that the contest will be between him and the candidate of his parallel of the candidate of his parallel of his parall ion as if they dwelt in Jerico.) I therefore appeal to the Whig colers of this county to come of ward and sustain Messrs. Worthington and Kennedy as the only possible mode of defeating the Fan Buren candidate, who is arxiously waiting to over them and their principles. Those of our friends who support Messrs. Smith and Strider, must know that they are few in number; and that as the Van Buren vote will be divided between Smith and Strider, neither of these gentlemen have the least prospect of success, and should retire from the contest, unless they wish to pull down the principles which they profess, in their own fall. We appeal to them in the name of our

the principles which they profess, in their own full. We appeal to them in the name of our common country and of the principles which we cherish, not to assist their political enemies in their mad projects upon the best interests of our beloved country. We appeal to them in behalf of those principles which you have so nobly contended for, through many a dark, and dreary day, amidst taunts and jeers of your political adversaries—now, when every point of the horizon is lit up with manifestations of delight at the success of those very principles. Since you can do your principles. Bince you can do your political principles no wrong!!!

And in conclusion, "A Mechanic" upbraids me for introducing one of the most striking passages contained in the English classics, and denominates it as stale; and by way of exhibiting his own independence as an Juthor, introduces four lines into his communication, for which he claims originality. Indeed, I am sure, that he has no cause to apprehend that the shades of Shakspeare, Milton, or Byron will rise to reproach him with plagiary, since any one who would accord to him the merit of originating pross, could not justly deny him whatever merit might be attached to the poetry. For myself, "modest" as I am accused of being by "A Mechanic," I would greatly prefer that my readers should have for their perusal elegant extracts chanic," I would greatly prefer that my readers should have for their perusal elegant extracts from one of the greatest poets who ever lived, to the torture of reading four lines, which would only be known as designed for the impiration of poets, by the fact of one line running under the other. I now take an everlasting farewell of our democratic friend, and no vituperation and no tor-lives of a Scanish I possibility will save induce the faund embodied in the Resolutions of Kentucky and Virginia in 1798, and the

OF THE REPUBLICAN CONVENTION,

The crisis was deemed to be an important one; and in velerence to certain differen-

are unwilling that any communication should be are inwated strongh your paper bearing on its face circulated through your paper bearing on its face either a suggestic felse or a suppression of truth, whether intended or not. Now, it does seem to me, that the communication signed, "New School" is guilty of both these offences. We very much fear that the whole article was designed, and copfear that the whole article was designed, ad cop-fundum, to create prejudice and not to exhibit the truth. Whatever was its descen, it is inevitably calculated, if uncontradicted, to produce a false impression on those who read it. Simply to prevent this is the object of the present reply. The first false impression that communication is adapted to produce is, that the Old School party in the South, have charged their New School in the South, have charged their New School rethren of the minority in the South with Abole Sought to be made, though not directly alleged, that such charge was made against the minority who separated from the Winchester Presbytery who separated from the Winchester Presbylery nt its late meeting in this place. Plat not "New School" Lune that no such efforts has ever been made against the brethren of the impority in the South, and especially against the shinority of Winchester Presbytery?—It is therefore not necessary that "the fair Clossip, funa clantera, should point with the fair Clossip, funa clantera, should point out one New School main as an Abolitionist this side of Mason and Dixon's line," because she has not charged one with it; and therefore the pathetic appeal of N. S. on this point is sadly

-It is true it has been charged, and upon good evidence, that Abolitionism prevails to a very general extent among the Northern and Northwestern Representatives of the New School Churches to the General Assembly. And it is admitted that this fact did form a motive for the excinding acts of the Assembly of '37, though not the principal ground of those acts. But it never did form a motive, nor "occasion a necessity, for the excommunication from the Church of 500 ministers and 60,000 communicants, without the ministers and 60,000 communicants, without the form even of trial or citation" as a lleged by N. S. Because that was never either the design or legitimate effect of those acts. This is a state missrepresentation of those acts, repeatedly made, and as repeatedly denied and disproved. Their design and effect simply was, to declare those Synods no longer contitutionally entitled to representation in the General Assembly, without affecting, in the remotest degree, the ministerial affecting, in the remotest degree, the ministeria standing or christian character of any one faints

Agaia—N. S. freely and openly admits that Abolition has crept into the N. S. ranks in the North and West—that there are Abolitionists, and rank ones too, in connexion with some of the New School Churches in that region. But we affirm that Abolitionism has not only crept into the New School ranks in the North and West and the North and West and the North and West and the North and North an West, and is found among some of the Churches, but it has lifted its naked crest holdly and prevails to a very general extent among most of their Churches. It is known and admitted, that Dr. Beman, the coryplicus of the party, one of the Moderators of the New School Assembly, is an Abolitionist of the rankest type; and it is believer Moderator of the N S., is equally decided. But, asks New School, are there none in the bosom of the Old School. Churches? And he answers—there are thousands. Where is the proof that there are thousands.—
We admit there are comparatively a few, smong
the O. S. Churches of the North and Northwest, but deny that there are either thousands or hundreds, or even fiftys.—It is further denied that there "are large majorities or minorifies in Old School Presbyteries or Synods at the North or Northwest." There is no proof that there is more than one OldSchoolPresbytery in which a majority are Abolitionists: And it is well known that not only many New School Presbyteries are Ab-olitionists, but that a decided majority of the N. S. General Assembly are such.

Now for the act of 1818. "This law," says N. School, "was the work of Old School men." This act was the her of the General Assembly of 1818. Queroi—is there any evidence that any of the New School voted against this act? Is not the fact the other way? It say, is not that act as assembly claims to be the only true General Assembly of the Church, and as such, both legally and eccleniatically, the successor of every preceding Assembly; and of the Member of the Assembly of the Assembly; and the assembly of the Assembly; and the assembly of the Assembly; and assembly and the assembly of the Assembly; and assembly and assembly and the assembly of the Assembly; and assembly and the assembly of the Assembly; and assembly as a second assembly and assembly as a second assembly and assembly as a second assembly as a second as much so as the other party. And there is will stand as their act until formally repealed. And will they repeal it? Dare they do it? And if they do not, will it not be their act? So much for the act of 1818, and those who are repossible-for it. As for the Rev. R. J. Breekenbridge and his Abolitionism, he is fully able to defend him off say, that it is known to all who would do that of that term.
