From the New York American. LIPE I saw a little fairy boat,
Glide o'er a glassy lake;
Bright bods wove 'roand the gibled prow,
Flowed seatered in its wake.
It held one fair and sylphlike child
Within its bosom slight,—
One hend upon the little helm,
Whilat all seemed calm and bright. I are that they bark again,
Upon a glaneing stream;
Flit midst its green and fairy isles,
Like a swift-passing dream.
A fair-haired youth now guided it,
Through all those changing seems
While am and storm around him pla
In abcovers and fitful gleams.

Tossed on a boundless sea:
Before it yawned a deep, dark gulf,
Beyond—Eternity.
An aged man reclined within,
With wasted form and eye;
But still his gaze forever fixed
Upon the brightening sky, For there, there beamed a deless light, That pilgrims long-sought haven, Where he might moor his shattered back: And that bright home was—Heaven.

WOMAN AND MARRIAGE. BY WASHINGTON IRVING.

I have speculated a great deal upon matrimony. I have seen young and beautiful women, the pride of the gay circles, married -- as the world says -- weil! Some have moved into costly houses, and their friends have all come and looked at their fine furniture and their splendid arrangements for happiness, and they have gone away and committed them to the sunny hopes, cheerfully and without fear. It is natural to be sanguine for the young, and at such times I am carried away by similar feelings. I love to get unobserved into a corner, and watch the bride in her white attire, and with her smilling face and her soft eyes moving loose. The cartilages of the ears were before me in their pride of life, weave a waking dream of her future happiness plance of dark gingerbread. I say I love to dream thus when I go to give the young bride joy. It is the nagive the young bride joy. It is the natural tendency and feeling touched by and if I ever yield to darker feelings, it is because the light of the picture is changed. I am not fond of dwelling upon such I silude to it only because I trust that my simple page will be read by some of the young and beautiful beings who moved daily across my path, and I would whisper to them, as they glide by, joyously and confidently, the secret of an unclouded when he started West, to go he knew not duction to the gentleman to whom on
