The power of buying and selling tills of exchange, by the Government, would also be peculiarly susceptible of, and liable to, abuse and perversion by a corrupt Administration, and might be used in aid of the deposite power to effect fictitious deposites, when any sinister object, such as breaking down particular banks, two powers any Administration might-and a corrupt one would-bring the whole banking and monied power of the country within its control, and use that control to subserve and promote its own ambitious or selfish objects.
