Hon. A. H. M. STUART.

The Discussion of the Fourth.

Agreeably to appointment, at the solicitation of the Whigs of the County, Mr. Stuart of Augusta agreed to address the people of Jefferson, after a heavy rain the night before, and the attendance from the country was tolerably full. It had been previously suggested, by a committee of the opposite party, that they would have a champion to reply toMr. Swart, if the committee which he expected to discharge the duty so unon the part of the Whigs had no objection. The Whig committee replied that they could not and absence of Mr. Bedinger, the Electoral canthen commit Mr. Stuart to any particular course didate of his party; but he was not the man to of procedure—that they would not limit him as shrink from any stark imposed by the Democracy, to time, &c., but should certainly make no object who had so often speal by film and mored him tion to any gentleman's replying to him, as however feeble his bodily or intellectual powdoubtless he would not himself make such objection, but that at allevents a rejoinder should be of the Democrats could be selected.

HENRY BEDINGER, Esq., the Electoral Candi. date, it was generally understood, would reply to Mr. Sinert, but that gentleman, much to the regret to all parties, being quite sick at Martinsburg, it was found necessary, the day before the discussion, to supply his place, and the lion. WILLIAM LUCAS was called upon to do battle for the Democracy.

The Court Room was handsomely decorated by the Whig ladies of the town. An arch of evergreen, with a portrait of Mr. Clay in the centre, was arranged on the justices' bench, from two columns put up for the purpose, and the Banners of the Clay Club were planted in arpropriate positions, right and left. A full length likeness of Mr. Clay was placed opposite the speaker's stand, in the gallery, and in this gallery seats were arranged for the ladies, and filled by them exclusively.

When Mr. Lucas appeared, the Banner of the "Democratic Association" was brought in, and placed on the bench with the other banners .-The whole presented an agreeable appearance. and the crowd by this time was just large enough to inspire the speakers, without incommoding of 1842 was in violation of the faith of the one another.

At a quarter before 12 o'clock, Andrew ed themselves to adhere. Lucas would have the same time to reply, and convenience of the speakers.

Being introduced to the sudience, at a quarter expressing the pleasure which it gave him to address his fellow citizens of Jefferson-stating his perfect willingness to hear Mr. Lucas or any other gentleman in reply-and invoking the auditory to weigh dispassionately and celmly whatever might be urged on both sides-as the best means of arriving at the truth. He was willing to concede to the mass of the opposite party just as much honesty and patriotism as he claimed for the Whige, or for himself, and that no one would more cheerfully correct his errors, when convinced of them, than he would-and he invited the strictest scrutiny into every fact and argument presented by him.

MONG the thousand medicines advertised as certain cures for pulmonaryockapiaints. Jayne's Expectorant stands alone. Its path to the public confidence has been paved, not with puffs, but cures; and the vouchers for its efficacy include an array of names which, for character and respectability, cannot be surpassed in this country. Pr. Jayne, being himself a Physician, does not probess to perform physical impossibilities; but he does assert, and he is borne out by well suthentiested fisca, that in all diseases of the unga and chem, which are susceptible of core without mirroulous into ference, his expectorant will restore the patient to health. No other medicine will remove mucor of position the throat so thoroughly as this. It iffectually looses the congulated masses from the thermal protions of the disengaged master. In all complaints of the pulmonary organs, even where unture seems to be making no effort to throw off the disease, Jayne's Expectorant imports vigor to the machinery of respiration, and enables them to diseasember themselves of the obstructions which had impeded their free operation.
