The tricks played upon the inexperience of country visitors to New York, are of endless variety: we proceed to describe one, we believe the very latest.

An honest and green countryman from Clinton county, found himself-lost himself we might as well say -in New York, not long since; and in a bar-room where he had made some acquaintances by his ingenious deportment, he exhibited among the stores of knives, keys, pencils, &c. in his trowsers' pockets, two bright sovereigns. One of the bystanders, on seeing these, warned the innocent youth against the danger of pickpockets, some of whom, he said, might be present, and rob him before he knew it.

"Not by a darned sight," said the cautions countryman. "I can find a safe place for them," and so saying he put both gold pieces in his mouth, and started out for a walk up Broadway. " He had proceeded but a short distance, before a boy with a dirty face and ragged jacket; who had been standing by the stove in the bar-room he, had just left, ran past him, and a moment after, he heard him bawling asuf balf killed A crowd quickly gathere'l round the crying boy, and the countryman was n ot the last, of course, to try and find out what was the matter.

"What ails you - what are you crying about?" asked one of the philanthropic

"Boo! hoo! I've lost my money! boo hoo !" cried the inconsolable dirty face. "Where? How much?" exclaimed the excited assembly

"Boo! hoo! I lost two sovereigns," and taking his hands from his eyes, from which he had been pressing a torrent of tears, exclaimed, pointing to our country friend, who by this time was surrounded by the crowd,-"That big rascal has got theft in his mouth."

The astonishment of the countryman made him speechless; and the indignation of the crowd at this supposed robbery of a poor boy was unbounded. One of the spectators caught him by the collar, the sovereigns rolled out upon the walk and were instantly seized by the boy while the innocent countryman, before he could say a word, got kicked and beaten. And had he not taken the policewan, who now made his appearance, back to where he had first shown the money, would have been taken to the Station House .-The sovereigns, of course, were a total

Making an Odd Fellow .- Some en terprising characters were tried at Columbia, South Carolina, a few days since, for attempting to make an Odd Fellow, with ceremonies rather different from those used on ordinary occasions. The candidate was a stupid fellow named Barentine. The "brethren" told him that if he would enter their order, he would not be oblised to do any more work as he would Repters 7—Total 128.

Tempted by the prospects thus held out, Barentine agreed to the process .-The ceremonies were then performed by applying a cattle brand, having the letter F. within a diamond, seven times a posterior. On the trial, Barentine was pressed so hard by the defendants' counsel, while giving his testimony, that he insisted on giving the court an occular demonstration of his injuries. Some of them remember that in times past, the Missonri Senater has rendered good service to the Locofoco cause; and even if he had now grown somewhat lokewarm, or if his position were somewhat du bious, the most vindictive of his assailants might it seems to us, find some palliation for his lack of zeal and asmness in the vascillating policy of the President himself on the Oregon question, whose position is at least as equivocal as that of Mr. Benton. So thinks the Lafayette (Indiana) Conrier, which, in a tone of amusing simplicity, remarks :

My. Benton's views on theOregon question differ from those of Gen. Cass, perhans, of Mr. Polk; but they are views that are coincided in by thousands of Democrats all over the Union, and therefore, he forsouth, is to be accused of playing the traitor and abandoning his party."
