NEVER JOKE WITH ELEPHANTS .--- A VOTY fat man went to see a collection of animals at North Shields the other day. Having orammed his pocket with apples, he, for diversion, suffered himself to be plundered of them by the elephant. The animal made a clean sweep, and did not leave a ingle apple in his pocket. He however, invited the creature to plunge its probos cis a second time into the pouch. The invitation was accepted, but there being no fruit, and the elephant not understanding jokes, the indignation of the animal was at boiling point. Seizing the huge individual by his coat, the creature at once boisted him ten feet from the groundan awful example for men who presume to joke with elephants. And your stores, warehouses, and transportation lines, on turnpikes, rail roads, and rivers, budened with commerce, and your thor-sands of ships upon the ocean, attest the extent and the prodigious amount necessary for the wants of tventy millions of people. We walk upon them, sleep upon them, eat bring all past ages into review. as present-hold all mankind in commerce and converse with each other, and all the winged heralds of fame and messengers of light and blessings to the world, which we all enjoy-and no man lives without them. So Ishall call no witnesses on these points, but leave them to the decision of yourselves as judges, and to your families as jury. But if these are essential requisites, without which society could not in its present state exist, but must retrograde again to barbarism, they are as essential as the products of our farms. Then we must have manufactories somewhere, and these require a prodigious amount of power to propel them, skill to direct them, and vast numbers of operatives must be fed and paid for their labor in conducting them. Our Valtey may be safely an timated to contain 400,000 inhabitants, who an timated to contain 400,000 mean and the second our must-pay abroad for the sustenance of the operathe cost their labor, pay the manufacturer for the cost their labor, pay the infinite durate in and his skill, and his profits besides — and then the mercantile profits of the large cities — warehous-ing, perhaps, on many of them, custom-house du-ties and the cost of transported ties, and the cost of transportation. And though we must have these articles, the money is throws from our doors never to return, while we have abundance of power, abundance of capital, and nbundance of unemployed labor, and our valleys yielding abundance to sustain that labor, which it is too expensive or too perishable to send to a listant market. Now suppose we turn the tables, and that for every dollar thus sent out of the Valley les were brought in and distributed amongst us. Would not our comforts and conveniences, and our wealth, be greatly increased thereby ? Would not a family be more benefitted in receiving a hundred dollars than in paying out for to be sent from his own door never to return ? But you will answer this question by raking another. Can this be done, and how? This brings us to the very gist of the matter. Here, perhaps,-having, passed most of my time during the last thirty, years, in the very midst of manufactories and manufacturing operations, and populations, -I may be better informed than many of you, and may trust to your candor to ex-amine and weigh well the facts I am about to state. The natural and artificial advantages we have are constancy and cheapness of power, cheapness of living, and easy transportation. The water power of the Shenandoah at the Great Falls and above, is passing uselessly by, in quantity sufficient for the manufacture of thinty or ferty, million worth of goods annually, and may be improved at a cost one-fifth the amount, or five hundred per cent less than the cost of water or five number of contress than the cost of water power at Lowell, or other large manufacturing districts in the country—or, than the cost of steam power in the large cities. Ripka, at Manayunk, (Pa.,) pays about $6,000 water rent annually, for the power to drive his mills., Jamieson at Norristown, (Pa.,) pays over $5,000 for fuel and expense of running his steam engines to drive his factory. Drake of Philadelphia, consumes about 10 tons of coal per day in his factories, which at three dollars per ton, would be $9,000 per an-num. The power of the Washington Manufacturing Company, at Kaign's Point, New Jersey, costs them 10 to $12,000 a year for fuel, And yet the Waler Power at the Guif Mills, passing uselessly by, may be improved to do more wo than the whole of these combined. Again, many of the manufactories in the Last-ern and Middle States are on inconstant strains, where they often are compelled either perially or wholly to suspend operations some months in a year. The machinery and operative consoquently are compelled to remain idle of unemployed earning nothing. While here the con-stancy of power would give constant employment for all. And were factory buildings and dwell; ings erected, the machinery and operations would soon be removed here and pay, high reput, rather than be subject to so much loss of employment every year; for, with the operatives loss of employment is loss of bread; and suspension to the manufacturer, may often compel him to lose his most reliable customers. Here, too. we have cheapness of living. Even
