THINK OF ME.

BY KATE LANDON. When eve lights her stars In the purple of the west, When earth's parting billows The moonbeams have kissed. When the pale stars are keeping Their watch o'er the sea, When the moon-beams lie sleeping

Oh! then think of me. When the tree tops are brilliant, And the shadows beneath Lie deep and unbroken And silent as death-When the mountain and valley And woodland and glen,

Are hushed in repose, Oh! think of me then. When music is breathing Enchantment around, And jesting and laughter Grow still at the sound. When the waters are musing Their song to the air, Oh! think that my spirit Is wandering there.

SELECTED STORY.

Mr. Benryden's opening speech occupied about an hour and a half, in the course of which he defended the policy of Mr. Polk in regard to the War-eulogized the Administration for the ease with which it procured its lowis-contrasted the same with the loan desired in the early part of Mr. Tyler's term-hastily glanced at the Tariffglorified Mr. Polk on account of the prosperous condition of the country-with an occasional interspersing of the "slang-whang" about a "no party" party !- and adverted to the present hostile attitude of the North and South as they stand arrayed on the Slave question. We always feel inclined to do full justice to an opponent, and have no hesitation in expressing our belief that Mr. Bedinger's opening speech was manifest on any previous occasion. Mr. B. gemerally submits wit and humor for fact and argument. But what shall we say of the powerful and every position that had been assumed, fairly, "by the horns," and annihilated each, with the ease a giant would break an hempen cord. For more overcome by some "charmed spell" to the brilliant thoughts that gushed forth as in a torrent stream. Nor was it all brilliancy and dazzling eloquence,-clear, sound and logical reasoning seemed to be entwined in every flash of his list and captivate the attention of a home auditoshowered on Mr. H., he has just cause for indulging in self-gratulation.

It is a source of regret that our columns are took up the several arguments advanced by Mr. Bedinger and the positions assumed, and thoroughly dissected every vein, artery and integral of Mr. B.'s speech. The question of the War was fully and frankly met, and though we may have partially differed with Mr. H. ia some points, we agreed cordially with him in the main of his argument, on this question. The policy of Mr. Polk's Administration in declaring that nothing short of 54 40 of Oregon belonged of right to the United States, and his backing out to 49, was held up as one of the becaties of the Baltianore Platform! The failure to procure loans in the early part of Mr. Tyler's Administration might easily be ascribed to the fact that about that time we had such repudiating Governors as McNutt of Miss,-the State of Illinois on the point of repudiation, and the largest indebted States failing even to pay the interest to the holders of their bonds! Was it any wonder, therefore, that a difficulty occurred in making a loan. Mr. B. had read from the report of the officer who had gone to England to negotiate, which country, the speaker, in true demagogical style, proclaim- ley Volunteers, and their associates from Jeffered to be "the hope of the Whig party."
