POETRY.

A CHAMBER SCENE.

She rose from her untrodden bed,
And passed her soft brown hair,
And in a tone as low and sweet,
As love's first whisper, breathed a prayer.
Her snow-white hands together pressed,
Her eyes were shrouded in her hair,
The folded linen on her bed,
Just as she lay, she saw a gleam,
And from her long and flowing dress
Escaped a hair and slender foot,
Whose fall upon the earth did press
Just like a snow-flake, soft and mute;
And, from the slumber, soft and warm,
A young spirit fresh from heaven,
She bowed her light and graceful form,
And humbly prayed to be forgiven.

Oh God! if souls suffer as these,
Need daily mercy at thy throne—
If she, upon her bended knees,
Our love and purest one—
She, who has seen the light of life—
We deem her some day bright—
If she, in these soft eyes and tears,
Day after day, in her first years,
Must kneel and pray for grace from Thee,
What fair, deeper need have we!
How hardy! if she win not heaven,
Will our own souls be forgotten?

THE SOUL'S PASSING.

Take her faded hand in thine—
Hand that no more answers kindly;
See the eyes were wont to shine,
Uttering light and gladness blindly;
Tender-hearted, speech departed—
Speech that rebled so divinely.
Runs no more the circling river,
Warming, brightening every part;
There is stumbered cold and frost—
No more merry leap and start—
No more flushing cheeks to blushing—
No more silent home the heart!
Hope not answered to thy praying!
Cold, unresponsive lies she there,
Death that ever will be slaying,
Something gentle, something fair,
Gone with numbers soft as slumbers—
She is with Him, elsewhere!

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE DISCOVERED HUSBAND.

"Marry, my dear," said Charles Halwood to his wife, "come set me while I read this beautiful piece in your magazine this week."
"Is it something very interesting?" said Mrs. Halwood.
"Oh! very, indeed; it is written by our new authoress, Alice Carlisle, of whom every one is speaking in such high terms. I wonder who she is, and what kind of a woman she seems determined to keep herself in security."
"Perhaps she has special reasons for so doing," said Mrs. Halwood.
"I suppose she has," replied her husband, "but I should think one of her brilliant talents, and one, too, who receives so much applause from the public in general, would be proud to make herself known. But I will read it to you her production in this number."
During the first year of Mr. Halwood's marriage life he had lived very happily; but when the novelty had worn off, and he saw his wife from day to day wearing the same quiet smile, and preserving the same modesty of demeanor, he began to feel a sort of curd when in her society. Instead of trying to throw off that kind of restraint felt by both, by spending his leisure moments with his wife, studying her character of mind, he devoted the most of them to reading the various periodicals of the day with which his table was loaded. He had become very much interested, of late, with a new authoress who had suddenly made her appearance in the literary world, under the name of Alice Carlisle, and who had become very popular in the public prints, but still kept her name in secret.

When Halwood had finished reading, he exclaimed, "Is not that beautiful? How pure and elevated the thought! Do you not think she is a fine writer, Mary?"
"Why, yes, pretty good," replied Mrs. Halwood, with seeming indifference, and turning away, busied herself with a book before her.
Halwood felt disappointed and pained; he sat for a few moments humming a short tune, and then throwing down the book he went his way to his office. "How stupid," he muttered, as he walked along, "not to see the beauty of such a production as that—Oh! that Alice Carlisle was my wife! Then I could be a happy man—then there would be congeniality of thought and feeling. His interest in his office, but his thoughts were not there. He tried to dissipate his feelings by looking over and arranging his papers; but still his mind would wander upon the fair authoress, and then he would compare what his imagination pictured her to be, with his wife, and he felt more dissatisfied than ever. He made every enquiry and took every measure that prudence would admit to ascertain who she was, but all to no purpose.

Time wore on, but brought no relief to the mind of Charles Halwood. Since that day of which we have spoken, he had never mentioned Alice Carlisle to his wife, or spoke of her writings; but he had eagerly devoured every article of hers that appeared. He spent but little time at home, and appeared reserved and silent in his presence. At length he broke through all restraint and resolved to address her by her fictitious name through the medium of the post office. Accordingly he penned a short note speaking in very high terms of her talents as a writer, expressing a strong desire to become acquainted with her, and ending by begging her to grant him an interview. He dropped this note in the post office, and anxiously awaited a reply; nor did he wait long, for he soon received the following note:
"Mr. Halwood—Dear Sir: I received your note of this morning, and am very grateful for the complimentary manner in which you have spoken of my writings. As you earnestly request an interview, if you will at 10 o'clock this eve, walk in M—street, you will meet a lady in a Quaker garb, turn and walk with her, and you will have the pleasure of conversing with Alice Carlisle."
When Halwood had read the note, he hid it on the table and for a moment his better judgment told him that he had already procured too far in this affair, and conscience whispered, "Better sit with your wife this eve, whom you have sworn to protect." But he did not list to the voice of conscience; an opportunity offered to gratify his desire, and he resolved to improve it. He had taken the first step from the path of rectitude, and it was easier going forward than backward.

Evening at length came, and Halwood waited with impatience for the hour to arrive for him to go forth to meet the Quakeress, for such he believed her to be. He had spent his evenings, of late, at the office, and being wholly unacquainted with the inhabitants of the street chosen for their meeting, he felt no fear of being recognized by any one during the interview, or that it would

GOOD MANNERS.

Good-bling carries along with it a dignity that is respected by the most polite. It is a habit that is acquired by the study of the most improved. No man ever said a pert thing to the Duke of Marlborough. No man ever said a civil one (though many a cunning one) to Sir Robert Walpole. Good manners are the settled modes of society. It is a commercial life; returns are equally expected for both; and people will no more advance their civility to a bear, than their money to a bankrupt. The scholar without good-breeding is a pedant; the philosopher a cynic; the soldier a brute, and every man is disagreeable.—Cassius.

A man endowed with great perfection, without good-breeding is like one who has his pockets full of gold, but always wants change for his ordinary occasions. Wisdom, valor, justice, and learning cannot keep a man in estimation, that is possessed of these excellencies, if he wants that inferior art of life and behavior, good-breeding. The portable quality of good-manners seasons all the parts and occurrences he meets with, in such a manner that there are no moments lost; but they all pass with so much satisfaction, that the heart is made by us—Socrates.

I hope that my readers will feel impelled to cultivate, more assiduously than they have ever done, this most useful and important quality of life. If I shall have been the means of exciting one good resolution faithfully carried out, not only will the immediate subject of the change be benefited, but all with whom he has had intercourse, will have reason to praise "THE LETTER-BOX."

A moderate kindness in the little rules of good-breeding, gives a man some assurance, and makes him easy in all his conversations. For want of this, I have seen a professor of a liberal science at a loss to salute a lady, and a most excellent mathematician, not able to determine whether she should stand or sit while my lord drank to him.—Boswell.

An intrepid courage is, at best, but a holiday kind of virtue; to be seldom exercised, and never, but in some great emergency, and then, it is not a virtue, and a word which I would fain bring back to its original signification of virtue, is mean good-a-ature, and is not a virtue; they are the bread of mankind and the staff of life.—Davies.

A man thus disposed, perhaps, may not have much learning or any wit; but he has common sense, and something friendly in his behavior; it conciliates men's minds more than the highest parts without the disposition; and when a man of such a turn comes to old age, he is almost sure to be treated with respect and honor.—Adams.

There is no society or conversation to be kept up in the world without good nature, or something which bears its appearance, and supply its place. For this reason mankind have been forced to invent a kind of artificial humanity, which is what we express by the word good-breeding.—Adams.

Man, a social animal, is formed to please in society, and a person that would break through the rules of decency, so as to shock those who surround him, would lose the public esteem, and become incapable of doing any good.—Montesquieu.

The character of a decent, well-behaved, gentleman, seems not to be attainable by a person of no great parts or passions, than by one of greater genius, and more volatility.—Socrates.

Any one may do a casual act of good-nature, but a continual one shows it is a part of their temper.—Swift.

'Tis not wit merely, but a temper which must form the well-bred man.—Shaftesbury.

MELANCHOLY.

Melancholy or mental nervousness as it may be called, is generally the handmaid to the sick couch. Here the faint-hearted man, unlike his angry brother, weeps in his regret, rather than glows in his revenge; neither more nor less does he demand our sympathy. The two conditions are the saddest of suffering humanity. Like anger, it occasionally attains its climax, and it then may be corrected; but when it has become a habit, a man may as well say he is a man, but to antedate the quotation, he should also bear them like a man. In these fits of extremes the senses may be held to be at fault, and may hap they may be, but in all errors there must be wrong somewhere; the question is, can not the feelings of depression—the abandonment to grief—the absolute despair, which often ends in self-murder, be corrected? Here the faint-hearted man, who is not merely to be achieved, I admit, by resolution; for the resolution, unsustained by removal of the cause, doubles upon itself and becomes as irremediable, but where the cause is known to be irremediable, the next wisest part to play is to put up with it, for depending upon its removal is to put up with it. We must remember the fable of Hercules and the wagoner. The god rebuked the lout for his tears, and bit him with his team, and put his own shoulder to the wheel. He did so, and soon got out of the rut. Richelieu exclaimed to a hopeless adventurer, "Despair should not be found in a young man's vocabulary." Whatever dilemma we may be in, our first effort should be directed to its removal.—The more we fret, the further we are off.

THE HEART.

What an odd thing experience is! now turning over so rapidly the book of life, now writing so much of a single day. We hear of the head turning grey in a single night—the same change passes over the heart—Affection is the tyrant of a woman, and only bids her to the banquet to suspend a cutting sword over her head, which a word, a look, may call down to inflict the wound that strikes to the death, or heals but with a scar. Could we fling back the veil which nature and society alike draw over these feelings, how much sorrow—unexpressed because unexpressed—would be found! How many a young and beating heart would show disappointment graven on the inmost core! what a history of vain hopes, gentle endeavors, and anxieties and mortifications, laid bare!—There is one phrase continually occurring in conversations—"O, a woman never marries the man she loves!" It is a strange thing, how often, how lightly it is said! how little thought given to the world of suffering it involves! Checked by circumstances—abandoned from necessity, the early attachment may depart with the early enthusiasm which youth brings but leaves not.

THE PRESS.

The power of the press is as boundless as that of society. It reaches the throne—it is enclosed in the cottage. I can pull down injustice, however lofty, and raise up lowliness, however deep. It castigates crime, while the law can only punish without repressing them. Wherever an eye can see, or a hand can write, there is the press.—Persons in tribulation rely on it for redress, and they feel sure that wrong will not go unpunished, if it be known to the journals.—Like light, it penetrates into every nook and cranny of society, and carries help and healing to its beams. It rises rising above in the bud. It steps the side of tyranny when setting in full flood. It derives its vast power from the principles of its being.—Speaking out truth and representing reason, it concentrates on one point the whole moral power of society, and persuades and governs without violence; by the mere knowledge that the physical power of society is always ready to vindicate the right. It is always into operation, the course of society becomes uniform and equal, and its ends are obtained without those convulsions and rebellions which a rude, unlettered people make their will known.—Dorsey's Journal.

Halwood stood in breathless anxiety; he longed and yet feared to see her unveiled, he bowed her head, together with a loose smooth combed hair, threw from her—and, kind reader, his own wife stood before him! Halwood was thunderstruck. He stood for a moment paralyzed. During this one moment the past, as quick as lightning passed through his mind; every thing was explained, and he rushed forward exclaiming, "Forgive me, forgive me!—but we will leave them to themselves, and just say that the next best look Halwood to his home a wiser man."

VOICE OF WISDOM AND AGE.

Permit me finally to add, that in my apprehension, the best way to be useful and happy in this life, is to cultivate the domestic affections—to love home—and, at the same time, to exercise a benevolent disposition towards others—to be temperate and just—to pursue lawful business, whatever it may be, with diligence, assiduous integrity of purpose, and in the perfect belief that honesty is equally binding in the discharge of public as of private trusts; for, when public morals are destroyed, public liberty can not survive.

If we are aspiring, we ought not to lose our diffidence; and if we seek for reforms, we ought not to lose our discretion. We ought to be content with the progress we ought to listen to the opinions of experience, and respect the advice and institutions of our ancestors; and, above all, we ought to have a constant and abiding sense of the superintending goodness of that Almighty Being, whose wisdom shines equally in His works and in His word, and whose presence is everywhere sustaining and governing the universe.—GRANVILLE KENNEDY.

DISAPPOINTMENT AND TOIL.

Happy are they who have never arrived at the goal of their wishes, and found the sparkling crystal waters, which they saw at a distance, nothing but beautiful delusions. For while we are indulging all our poetical sensations, we are even extending our hopes from the soft melancholy which falls around us, as if we are surrounded by youth, which knows no such charm; a youth passed in the dull, dreary void of daily routine; a youth so hopeless that life becomes a burthen, and even old age does not envy such youth.—

How many young, ardent and noble spirits are crushed by the cold material world; let the sun shine never so brightly, confined in a small, dark, hole, which only the blue day when even the Sunday joy brings a sensation of toil, and affords a few hours repose, to enable them to undergo the weary sufferings of another week. Can custom and habit reconcile people to such a fate? Alas! it is to be feared not; and yet how little do we think of such classes of men.

THE BLUSH.

What a very mysterious thing is the blush upon the human face! how truth telling, how unaccountable that a single word, a thought, a look, should bring the unimitable color to the cheek, like the tints of a summer sunset upon the sky. And only in the face it is seen; the hand, the feet, do not turn red in the same manner. Here the face shows itself the mirror of the soul. And in the blush how much there is to be learned; of modesty, of consciousness, of praise, of anger, of guilt, of sensibility! The woman without the blush at times upon her cheek, is the woman no more! for with it has departed the purity of her soul.

HOW TO BE HAPPY.

Said a venerable farmer, some eighty years of age, to a relative who lately visited him: "I have lived on this farm for more than half a century. I have a desire to change my residence long as I live on earth. I have no wish to be any richer than I now am. I have worshipped the God of my fathers with the same people for more than forty years. During that period I have rarely been absent from the sanctuary on the Sabbath, and never have lost but one communion season. I have never been confined to my bed by sickness for a single day. The blessings of God have been richly spread around me, and I have made up my mind long ago, that if I wished to be any happier, I must have more religion.—N. Y. Observer.

BEAUTIFUL SENTIMENT.

We live in the midst of blessings till we are utterly insensible of their greatness and of the source from whence they flow. We speak of our civilization, our arts, our freedom, our laws, and forget entirely how large a share is due to Christianity. But Christianity, out of man's history, and what would his laws have been, what his civilization? Christianity is mixed up with our very being and our very life; there is not a familiar object around us which does not wear a different aspect because the light of Christian love is upon it; not a law which does not owe its truth and gentleness to Christianity; not a custom which cannot be traced in all its holy and beautiful parts to the Gospel!—PARKER.

BE COURTEOUS.

Dr. Humphrey was once seated in a stage-coach, when a gentleman and lady, on their bridal tour, wished to be accommodated with seats in the inside. There being only one vacant seat, the newly-married pair were subjected to a separation, unless some stranger relinquished his place. This it appeared willing to do, when the gentleman mounted on the outside, insisting that the gentleman occupying his seat with him. Subsequently, the doctor was seated in the stage-coach, and was presented with a letter of introduction by the stranger he had seen nothing of, with the remark, the College, saying of Dr. Humphrey, or the Apollon.

To CORRECT DAMAGED GRAIN.—Musty grain, totally unfit for use, and which can scarcely be ground, may be rendered more palatable by steeping it in water, and letting it remain in the hot water, and then a quantity of salt water must be added to the grain to be purified. The musty quality of the wheat penetrates through the husk or outer covering in the hot water, and the decayed or rotten grains swim upon the surface, so that the remaining grain is effectively cleaned from all impurities, without any material loss.
